

Peace in our time?

As with many things desired, the indoctrination which we have received in school, church and the like “teaches” us that someone else is responsible for giving it to us and, if we don’t have it, then someone has taken it from us. This leads (intentionally) and inevitably to the ridiculous activities of fighting for peace, destroying for prosperity and many other expressions of insanity.

As the man once said: “Fighting for peace is like fucking for virginity.”

Even the definition of what the word “peace” means is given to us as a military expression and we are taught to believe that peace is the state in which no fighting is actually taking place; i.e. peace is an expression of dominance and control: It is something outside of yourself over which you have no personal influence!

But what is the reality? Is peace truly something which only someone else can give to you; something that can only be attained by depriving others of their ability to, themselves, determine the course of their lives? Does, for you, peace really mean that you must impose your will upon all other members of the human family?

Were the above true, you would never be able to experience peace!

There is an old English folk song “Harvest Home” in which the second half of the third verse is:

“The quiet of a heart at rest in peace abounding by love surrounding and the home is blessed”

This tells you not only what peace truly is but also where it is to be found.

When you cease to go outside of yourself; when you cease to hunt for peace then you may find peace where it resides. When you are at rest in your heart then and only then may you know peace.

Peace is a natural attribute of human being, one which can only be experienced by doing no thing!

There are two ways in which you can extend your consciousness outside of your immediate presence with your physical body. The one in which we have been well trained for many thousands of years is to seek, to hunt for something which we perceive as missing from our lives. The other is to BE the thing desired. Whichever you choose, you will immediately, through your action, establish a resonance. Whether this resonance is with that which you seek or something else depends upon the intrinsic nature of your action.

If you go hunting, you will, because that is the informational structure of your action, establish a resonance not with your intended object but with the action of hunting. This, of course, makes you a participant in the hunting experience and you will alternate between being the hunter and the hunted. That which you are hunting will, of course, remain inaccessible to you, not because you can't have it but simply because you are doing something else, i.e. hunting it! The experience which you, thereby create, is one of hunting and, in order to maintain the experience which you have chosen, the universe will keep the thing which you seek away from you. If you choose to hunt it, this is what you are stipulating. The pre-condition for hunting it is to not have it and, therefore, by your stipulation, it will be withheld from you.

Choosing the alternative way, i.e. to BE that which you desire, establishes a resonance with that which is desired. The universe, which can do nothing other than to obey your stipulations, will, perforce, then deliver to you that which you desire.

Simply stated, if you seek peace, you can never find it.
If you are peace then it will be given to you.

In order that mankind could experience the time of the patriarchy, also called the Age of Materialism, it was necessary that we all hold belief systems not in accord with reality. Did we not do so then the natural abundance would automatically occur and the patriarchy, which is its antithesis, could not. As this lesson has now been mastered, the return to natural abundance is a pre-requisite for our present age into which we have just entered. This entails a re-structuring of our belief systems.

Beliefs which have enabled us to experience the patriarchy are all based upon belief in lack. We have had to work hard to uphold these beliefs because they contradict the basic structure of this universe. We have had to create war, strife and much other unpleasantness in order to give beliefs in lack some semblance of relationship with reality. Even our agricultural systems have been structured to give merely 1/3rd to 1/5th of the produce possible and that also at a much reduced quality. It is the beliefs which have caused us to do this which need to be expunged and replaced.

To attain peace requires that we re-learn how to think in accord with instead of in opposition to the structure of the universe.

To this end, I have written the handbook "The Key to Luck" www.thekeytoluck.com
This book teaches step by step how to re-master your access to the natural abundance which abounds around you. One of the natural results of this is peace for all.

Blessed be
